

"What is it about them that attracts me?! Is it the subtle, intelligent form? A game of some perfectly graceful waving lines; where black and white are in perfect balance, with a contrasting colour accent; minimalism at its best. It is their cuddliness, their kindness, their activeness, their playful "way of life"? To me it was obvious, with the pure beauty and simplicity of these animals, I had to do something."

The Pinkwin designed by Guy Buseyne is convincing because of its balanced and pure lines in a highly stylised form. The palette of black, white, graphite and optional emphasis of gold and bronze enhances its classy appearance. The sculpture is even more striking in group arrangement. This attractive, highly tactile sculpture possesses a warmth typical for Selma Calheira's creations. In her studio Cores da Terra, she uses natural pigments and raw materials only which contributes even more to the warm and authentic appearance of the Pinkwin. Selma uses her craftsmanship and art to create beautiful pieces for us but also prosperity for the local community by using local talent and natural resources.
